

Day 1 Your Scotland: The Scottish Highlands & Cairngorms National Park tour begins. Travel from Inverness to Aberlour. Optional walk: Aberlour to Linn of Ruthrie (Linn Falls) loop walk

2 miles, easy, 250-ft. elevation gain and 225-ft. elevation loss

Meet your taxi at 1:30 p.m. in Inverness to travel to Aberlour in Scotland's Speyside, an area nourished by the salmon-filled River Spey and renowned for a rich whisky heritage, charming small towns, rolling hills, and fields of barley. Aberlour was once served by a railway that linked the village and the river, which today plays a central role in the outdoor lives of locals.

Upon arrival in Aberlour, set off on a warm-up walk to explore the village. Or head over to the riverside Alice Littler Park, home to the lovely Victoria Suspension Bridge, where you can pick up the mostly unpaved Linn Falls loop. The two-mile route through woodland passes the scenic Linn of Ruthrie waterfalls, perfect for a ramble to get your legs working.

Perhaps stop in the Speyside Way Visitor Center, a converted railway station in the park, for a spot of tea in the Tea Room. Or visit the Aberlour Distillery for an excellent tour and whisky tasting; it's right next to your hotel. If you prefer sweets over whisky, pay a visit to Walkers Shortbread, the largest independent biscuit maker in the UK. This heralded institution produces 60% of all the shortbread exported from Scotland; it is also the UK's largest biscuit exporter, serving more than 40 countries.

After an early evening orientation meeting, enjoy an included dinner at your hotel. Dining here is a treat, with all ingredients provided by local suppliers—whether game from the Ballindalloch Estate or lobster from Lossiemouth—and dishes served creatively.

Included Meals: Dinner

Day 2 Aberlour, Dufftown, and Craigellachie loop walk / Stay Put Day

13.3 miles, moderate, 1,100-ft. elevation gain and loss (with alternate walks of 5.3 or 8.1 miles)

After a full Scottish breakfast, set out on today's whisky and walking ramble! You walk from Aberlour to Dufftown and on to Craigellachie before looping back to Aberlour. If you wish, you can shorten your walk to five miles by skipping Craigellachie and taking a public bus or taxi (at your expense) from Dufftown back to Aberlour. Alternately, take a bus or taxi from Aberlour to Dufftown, then walk eight miles gently downhill along the river to Craigellachie and Aberlour.

You'll be tracing a "spur" of the Speyside Way, an 80-mile footpath that connects Buckie, an old fishing town on the Moray coast, to Aviemore, a resort town in Cairngorms National Park. Smugglers and bootleggers of sorts once roamed these hills. Whisky distillers, long required to pay a government tax, once produced their prized spirits at small stills hidden in the countryside. The "gaugers," or tax men, were often hard pressed to locate them. The route you walk today may well have been followed by any number of these whisky-making tax dodgers.

Begin directly from the hotel on an old right of way—or a "Gownie"—ascending three miles along the gentle hill that stands between Aberlour and Dufftown. It's a quiet country road through lovely farmland with views of Ben Rinnes, the highest mountain in the Moray region. Continue on a forested track to the top of the hill, then meander downhill along a heather-clad moor and among fenced grassy fields. Dufftown soon comes into view, scenically nestled in a sheltering bowl.

The self-described “malt whisky capital of Scotland,” Dufftown hugs a tributary of the River Spey. Its main square sports a handsome clock tower and several pubs where you might grab lunch if you didn’t pack a picnic. The Balvenie and Glenfiddich distilleries are here. They host spring and fall festivals that draw whisky lovers from all over.

Your footpath first leads you to Dufftown’s Balvenie Castle, a squat ruined fortress dating to the 13th century that has watched over the glens and passes to Speyside and Elgin for centuries. This has been home to three of Scotland’s most important families. Most notably, Mary, Queen of Scots, stayed here for two days in 1562 during her campaign against the Earl of Huntly.

Continue downhill to the Balvenie and Glenfiddich distilleries, each a feast for the senses and the curiosity. At Balvenie, witness its six coopers turning barrels and see the process of mashing, fermentation, and distillation. At Glenfiddich, founded in 1887 and still a family business, stroll among the typical pagoda-roofed malting buildings. Enjoy a tasting at each distillery.

A nice stretch along a former railway line next leads you high above the fast-moving River Fiddich. The Fiddich pours into the Spey in the small village of Craigellachie, your final destination before returning to Aberlour. Several pubs invite you to pause for a while, or you can tour and taste at the Craigellachie Distillery. Before you continue, take time to admire the first cast-iron bridge laid in Scotland. The elegant span over the River Spey—engineered by local hero Thomas Telford and today a footbridge—has provided passage across the waters for more than 200 years.

Make your way back to Aberlour via the Speyside Way, following the River Spey. As you walk, admire the fishing huts that line both banks and watch as fishermen head out for the catch of the day.

For dinner this evening, dine at the hotel or walk into town.

Included Meals: Breakfast

Day 3 River Dee loop walk or Lion’s Face and the Cromlins loop walk / Move on Day

3 miles, easy, 200-ft. elevation gain and loss (plus a 1.2-mile optional detour to Braemar Castle), or 3.8 miles, easy to moderate, 550-ft. elevation gain and loss

This morning, a 1.25-hr taxi ride takes you to the delightful storybook village of Braemar, located at the heart of the pristine Cairngorms National Park, the UK’s largest and one of the most magnificently scenic parks in the world. Five of Scotland’s highest peaks are here, each one skirted with ancient forests, and it provides habitats for golden eagles, ospreys, red deer, and even reindeer.

Braemar is the gateway to it all. Marking the eastern side of the park, it was a strategic spot for Scotland’s earliest kings, as several castle remains attest. Walkers come from all over the world to take in the spectacular vistas, stroll among woodland scenery, enjoy the stone-clad charms of the village, and visit the imposing Braemar Castle with its 400-year highland history.

Choose from two walking options today, each of which gives you the opportunity to explore the castle on the outskirts of the village. If you're feeling energetic, try both! You can set out directly from the Fife Arms hotel, a former hunting lodge of Queen Victoria and your home for the next two nights.

The easy River Dee loop walk meanders "Deeside," as locals might say. But first, you follow the narrow tributary known as Clunie Water as it tumbles toward the Dee. Lovely views up and down the valley unfold en route to the convergence of these two waterways and follow the Dee for a while. Later you leave the River Dee behind at the mill of Coull and climb a gentle hill into a birchwood stand and back to the village. If you wish, you may detour about 0.6 mile off the trail and follow a paved path to Braemar Castle, an L-shaped tower house with star-shaped curtain walls. The fortification dates to the 17th century, when the Earl of Mar built it as a hunting lodge. Since then, it has had a turbulent highland past.

Or enjoy an easy-to-moderate loop walk to Lion's Face and the Cromlins. Leave the village and climb into the hills through pinewoods and rolling fields. As you approach Lion's Face rock, take in superb views of Braemar, the Upper Dee Valley, the distant Cairngorm Mountains, and Invercauld House, the private home of the Farquharson family that once owned Braemar Castle. You also pass a pile of stones that mark the former home of the Thompsons, relatives of John Brown, Queen Victoria's famous servant. It's said that the Queen came here often to deliver tobacco and tea. Then continue along the backside of the hills and return to the village, perhaps stopping to explore Braemar Castle en route.

After your walk, take time to explore more of Braemar. Admire the church, with its barn-like interior. Tour the Lochnagar Distillery, which once held the royal warrant from Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. Hire a car or take the bus nine miles to Balmoral Castle, a royal summer residence. Or browse some of the thousands of artworks and antiques at your magnificent hotel, the Fife Arms.

This evening, enjoy dinner at your hotel, where the finest Scottish produce is crafted into delicious dishes that celebrate local, fresh, and seasonal ingredients.

Included Meals: Breakfast, Dinner

Day 4 Morrone Birkwood loop walk or Morrone ascent / Stay Put Day

3.9 miles, easy to moderate, 400-ft. elevation gain and loss OR 7.4 miles, moderate, 1,750-ft. elevation gain and loss

Start the day with a delicious and hearty breakfast in the Clunie dining room at your hotel, perhaps traditional Scottish porridge or a full plate of eggs, sausage, bacon, black pudding, beans, and a scone. When you're ready, head out on your choice of walks directly from the front door.

Whereas yesterday's walk brought you east of the village, today's leads you either to the west or the south. The Morrone Birkwood loop ("birk" is Scots for birch) delivers you from deciduous trees in the valley into a nature reserve teeming with the finest examples of downy birchwoods in the UK. Among them, a profusion of juniper thrives, an enduring holdover of the old woods that once cloaked the Cairngorms. Follow a single-track trail into a massive stand of birch. The lichen that hangs on them is evidence of the clean air here—and of the forest’s age. Enjoy the fragrant juniper undergrowth as you proceed to the Morrone Viewpoint and other stunning overlooks of the Cairngorms, upper Deeside, and the valley blanketed with fields and forests. A route through open moorland and over small streams rounds out your ramble.

If you prefer to get in some altitude, take on the Morrone ascent, a superb hill walk with magnificent views. Morrone is classified as a “corbett,” one of the 222 mountains in Scotland that reach to between 2,500 and 3,000 feet. You reach the summit via a birchwood forest and open moorland. Unimpeded 360-degree views of the Cairngorms and Braemar await. Take time to take in spectacular vistas from the summit, then a clear track and old road along the River Clunie leads you back to the village.

Dinner is on your own this evening. You’ll find many choices in the village, or sample the fine menu at the hotel.

Included Meals: Breakfast

Day 5 Great Glen Way: Bridge of Oich to Fort Augustus / Move on Day

4.8 miles, easy, 100-ft. elevation gain and loss

After another incredible breakfast, a three-hour taxi ride takes you through Cairngorms National Park to the Bridge of Oich, also known as Victoria Bridge. There’ll be a stop along the way to stretch your legs and grab a packed lunch for later. The Bridge of Oich, protected by Environmental Scotland, was opened in 1854 to carry traffic over the River Oich at the northern end of Loch Oich. Today it is an active pedestrian path and the starting point of your flat, easy walk to Fort Augustus and Loch Ness, about five miles away.

Today you join the ranks of Scotland’s most enthusiastic walkers as you trace part of the Great Glen Way, one of the country’s most beloved trails. It stretches 78 miles from Fort William in the southwest to Inverness in the northeast, hugging the Caledonian Canal—and slicing through Scotland’s longest glen—for most of its length. Your five-mile stroll follows the towpath, passing the Bridge House Tea Garden, pretty woodlands, Culloch and Kyltra Locks, tidy lock-keepers’ cottages, and an array of pleasure boats. Your walk concludes at Fort Augustus, where the canal meets the world-famous Loch Ness.

Fort Augustus is one of those highland towns that has retained its charms despite its popularity. Its location on the south shores of Loch Ness make it a favored spot for those in search of the lake’s legendary creature. But locals prefer to just sit and watch leisure boats head from the canal into the loch. The second largest of Scotland’s lakes, Loch Ness stretches some 23 miles from Fort William in the south to Inverness in the north. Even with all its notoriety, it remains one of the most pristine and stirring sights in the highlands, particularly when a mist sits on the water and the hills on either side seem to rise from clouds.

As for Fort Augustus, the town saw its start in the 1730s, when British General Wade built a fort here in the wake of the Jacobite Rising of 1715. He named it after the Duke of Cumberland, Prince William Augustus. The name stuck, even after the fort was sold to the Lovat family—for whom your hotel for the next two nights was named. If you have time upon your arrival, visit the interesting Caledonian Canal Heritage Centre, which chronicles the construction and history of this impressive manmade waterway. Perhaps—today or tomorrow—embark an hour-long cruise on the atmospheric waters of Loch Ness.

Dinner is on your own. The Station Road Restaurant at your hotel is quite popular with locals, serving thoughtfully prepared dishes of fresh seasonal ingredients in a refined setting that befits your grand surroundings. The menu varies, but you might savor Orkney Scallop, Highland Gouda, or Duck Liver Twiglet.

Included Meals: Breakfast

Day 6 Inverfarigaig to the Falls of Foyers loop walk / Stay Put Day

7.2 miles, easy to moderate, 1000-ft. elevation gain and loss

Following breakfast at your hotel—a continental buffet and a hot meal showcasing some great Scottish fare such as eggs, smoked haddock or salmon, porridge, and potato scone—a 30-minute taxi ride delivers you to the walk's start at the Forestry Commission. This is the tiny hamlet of Inverfarigaig, just above the eastern shoreline of Loch Ness. Towering trees, plentiful wildlife, and spectacular views of Loch Ness' south shore await you in the moss-covered woodlands of Farigaig Forest.

In this haven for colorful wildflowers, butterflies, Roe and Sika deer, and red squirrels, you wind your way along the South Loch Ness Trail to an overlook toward a dramatic rocky outcrop. Keep an eye out for hidden lochans (small lochs) and the remains of an ancient fort at Dun Dearduil. The path continues, rising and falling through heather and birch as it crosses several ridges that provide sweeping views in all directions. You arrive at the Upper Foyers, where you can take a break if you wish at the Foyers Waterfall Café.

From here, you descend through woodlands to Lower Foyers, admiring views of one of the most spectacular waterfalls in the highlands. So stunning are these lovely cascades that they have been attracting visitors since Victorian times; they even inspired Robert Burns to compose a poem about them in 1787: "Among the heathy hills and ragged woods/The roaring Foyers pours its mossy floods." Return to Inverfarigaig via a variety of scenic paths directly on the shore of Loch Ness.

Return to Fort Augustus with your afternoon taxi. Dinner this evening is on your own.

Included Meals: Breakfast

Day 7 Travel to Inverness. Your Scotland: The Scottish Highlands & Cairngorms National Park tour concludes

A one-hour taxi ride after breakfast takes you to Inverness, where you can make your connections home or onward, or spend an additional day or two in this charming Scottish city.

Included Meals: Breakfast
